NATIONAL ELECTRICITY LAW

UNDER section 41 of the National Electricity Law (NEL), the Australian Energy Market Commission (AEMC) gives notice of the following direction from the Ministerial Council on Energy (MCE), received on 11 May 2009.

Pursuant to section 41 of the NEL, the MCE directs the AEMC to conduct a review of the effectiveness of National Electricity Market (NEM) security and reliability arrangements in light of recent extreme weather events. In identifying options for addressing issues raised by these events, the AEMC shall have regard for the need for actions to be proportionate, as well as the value of stability and predictability in the energy market regime.

The AEMC's review is to provide advice in relation to the generation and transmission elements of the power system. While matters relating to the performance standards of distribution networks are the responsibility of jurisdictions, the MCE appreciates any advice the AEMC can provide to ensure network security and reliability. This review should be consistent with, and draw on, a number of reviews and rule change proposals being progressed by the AEMC and the Reliability Panel.

In the context of extreme weather related events such as droughts, heatwaves, storms, floods and bushfires, the AEMC is directed to:

- examine the current arrangements for maintaining the security and reliability of supply to end users of electricity and provide a risk assessment of the capability of those arrangements to maintain adequate, secure and reliable supplies,
- provide advice on the effectiveness of, and options for cost-effective improvements, to current security and reliability arrangements, and, if appropriate,
- identify any cost-effective changes to the market frameworks that may be available to mitigate the frequency and severity to the security and reliability of the power system.

The MCE considers that any recommendations arising from the review should also identify, where applicable, possible benefits or lessons for the broader energy market framework.

The MCE does not anticipate that this review will result in a fundamental revision of the electricity market design.

The AEMC is to report by 29 May 2009 on measures that are currently under consideration that would improve system reliability and security and any further cost-effective measures that could be taken in the short term that would impact on system reliability for the summer of 2009-2010.

The AEMC is to report by 30 October 2009 on any cost-effective changes that could be made to energy market frameworks that would improve system reliability in the longer term and contribute to the more effective management of system reliability during future extreme weather events.

Copies of both of these reports are to be provided to the Australian Energy Regulator and the National Electricity Market Management Company/Australian Energy Market Operator. The MCE will determine whether the reports are to be published.

Further details on the above matter are available on the AEMC's website www.aemc.gov.au. All documents in relation to the above matter are published on the AEMC's website and are available for inspection at the offices of the AEMC.
